

Content Strategy & Video Topic Guide

May 2026 | Internal Working Document

Content Strategy Overview

This document outlines the social media content strategy for Hill Country Home Concepts. All content originates on the HCHC website (hillcountryhomeconcepts.com) and syndicates to Instagram and Facebook. This website-first approach ensures content ownership and builds domain authority for SEO over time.

On-Camera Identity

Calm. Steady. Direct. The trusted advisor who has seen every version of this problem and isn't interested in softening the truth. Not an influencer. Not a performer. Someone who knows what they're talking about and is willing to say the thing nobody else will say — without raising their voice to do it.

Mixed Audience Strategy

HCHC content reaches four distinct audience types simultaneously. Rather than creating separate content streams for each, every video is built around a single through-line that lands differently depending on who is watching.

The Through-Line

“Interior design in new construction is not about aesthetics. It’s about outcomes.”

How the through-line lands per audience

Audience	What they hear	What they do next
Builders & Developers	Faster production, fewer warranty claims, higher upgrade revenue, buyers who close with confidence.	Follow for professional insights. Eventually reach out about design services.
Interior & Home Designers	This is what our profession actually does. Here's a tool that gives you your time back.	Investigate the presentation engine. Consider a subscription.
Homeowners	You will get what you actually want, installed correctly, the first time, without wasting money.	Book a consultation. Stop planning to DIY the new build.
General Public	I didn't know designers did that. I didn't know that's what happens when they don't.	Share the video. Build brand awareness.

Content Series

Two active series launch immediately. A third series is planned for a future phase when bandwidth allows.

Series 1 — What Designers Actually Do

Format: Solo talk to camera

Job: Authority building. Reframes the interior design profession for all audiences.

Content tag: Tips & Ideas / Process (alternates by topic)

Length: 2–4 minutes. One topic. No filler.

Growth mechanic: Credibility. Viewers who find you through Series 3 come here to verify you know your subject.

Framing principle

Every video centers on a consequence, not a description. Not “here’s what I do” but “here’s what happens when this doesn’t exist.” Educational content that makes every audience feel the stakes.

Video topics

#	Video Title	Opening Hook
1	Why your builder needs a designer before the foundation is poured	Most builders bring in a designer too late. Here's what that costs them.
2	What happens to your warranty when the wrong tile goes in	A $3 tile decision made without a designer can cost thousands at warranty.
3	The document that prevents every job site argument	There's one piece of paper that eliminates 80% of installer miscommunication. Most builds don't have it.
4	Why design appointments take weeks — and how to fix it	A buyer shopping three showrooms over six weeks is a production problem, not a preference.
5	What a design center manager actually does all day	It's not picking pretty things. Here's what's really happening.
6	How a designer helps a builder make more money on upgrades	The right selections at the right price point aren't just good design — they're a revenue strategy.

Series 3 — Unpopular Opinions

Format: Solo talk to camera. One take energy.

Job: Reach and growth. Contrarian takes that get shared, argued about, and remembered.

Content tag: Tips & Ideas

Length: 60–120 seconds. State the take. Prove it. Done.

Growth mechanic: Disagreement drives comments. Agreement drives shares. Both grow the account.

Delivery principle

Calm and direct. No raised voice, no clickbait energy. State the uncomfortable true thing like it's obvious — because to you, it is. That restraint is what makes it land harder than a rant would.

Video topics

#	Video Title	Opening Hook
1	New construction is the wrong place to DIY	You're about to rip out brand new materials to replace them with the same thing in a different color. Let me show you the math.
2	The cheapest house is never the cheapest house	Base price means nothing if you're going to upgrade everything after close.
3	Your designer isn't slowing down your build — your lack of a design system is	Builders who blame designers for delays usually don't have a design program. Those are different problems.
4	Spending more in the showroom saves money at closing	I know that sounds like something a designer would say. Let me prove it.
5	Independent designers are costing builders more than they know	Multiple showrooms, multiple meetings, no system. Here's what that actually looks like on a production schedule.

Series 4 — The Contractor & The Designer (Future Phase)

Status: Planned. Do not produce until Series 1 and 3 have at least 8 videos published and an established following.

Podcast-style conversation format featuring Ena and her husband (general contractor). Two people who understand both sides of the construction relationship — design decisions and field execution — discussing real scenarios, disagreements, and solutions in real time.

This format becomes the highest-performing content because it covers the full builder-to-homeowner relationship in one conversation, feels unscripted and credible, and has built-in tension that keeps viewers watching.

Filming Setup & Logistics

Primary location — Home studio corner

Set up one consistent, curated corner at home. Neutral tones, a few intentional objects, slightly editorial feel. This becomes your signature backdrop — especially for Series 3 which should feel personal and direct.

Consistency in backdrop builds visual brand recognition. Viewers learn to associate the space with your voice before you say a word.

Secondary location — Furniture stores

Reserve for Series 1 topics where the physical environment adds context — material discussions, selection walkthroughs, product comparisons. Build relationships with 1–2 local stores in the San Antonio / Hill Country area who would welcome the visibility.

Note: Filming at place of current employment is on hold until HCHC has independent momentum and the work conversation with current employer is appropriate. Do not use current design center space without that clearance.

Script approach

Do not write full scripts. Use bullet point outlines of 3–5 points per video. Talk through each point naturally — the same way you explain these concepts to builders and clients every day. You already know this material well enough to speak without notes.

Series 3 videos in particular should feel like a decision, not a production. One idea. Two minutes. Done.

Publishing & Content Ownership

Website-first publishing model

Every piece of content is created and published on hillcountryhomeconcepts.com first. The post lives at its canonical URL (/latest/[slug]) and is indexed by search engines under the HCHC domain. Social platforms (Instagram, Facebook) receive the syndicated version with a link back to the website.

Why this matters:

- You own the content. Platform algorithm changes don't affect your archive.
- Search engines index your domain, not Instagram's. SEO compounds over time.
- Keywords like "Texas Hill Country interior design" and "builder finish selections San Antonio" build ranking on your site.
- Every social share drives traffic back to hillcountryhomeconcepts.com.

Content tags (public-facing filters)

Every post is tagged with one of three public categories that appear as filters on the website Latest section:

Tag	What goes here
Projects	Finished project photos, before/after content, builder partnership showcases. Primary tag for work that sells.
Tips & Ideas	Educational content, DIY commentary, design advice, Series 1 and Series 3 videos. SEO workhorse — how-to content gets searched directly.
Process	Behind the scenes, in-progress shots, workflow content, engine demos. Builds trust with professional audience.

Posting cadence

Post what you will actually sustain — not what you aspire to. Two quality videos per week that get published consistently will outperform five that sit in drafts. Aim for two posts per week to start. Adjust based on what your schedule allows after the first month.

Series 2 — The Math Nobody Shows You (Tabled)

This series — data-forward, real-scenario number walkthroughs comparing upgrade costs, production timelines, and warranty claims — is tabled until Series 1 and 3 have momentum.

It requires committed numbers, researched scenarios, and likely graphic support. It is too valuable to rush. Revisit when you have an established audience and the bandwidth to produce it correctly.

Topic ideas to hold:

- Cost of upgrading in the showroom vs. ripping out after close
- Time lost in weeks of shopping appointments vs. one design session
- Warranty claim costs vs. product upgrade costs at selection
- Builder revenue comparison: with and without a structured design program
